BERRY, THE HANGMAN. How He Got His Grewsome Office and

Why He Resigned It. Berry, the famous English hangman, and an extraordinary career. He worked as a carpenter, engineer and printer before joining the police force. He knew his predecessors, Marwood and Calcroft, and secured the post of hangman out of 1,400 applicants. It is said that Berry was chosen as hangman by the sheriffs of London through an an-FOR SALE—Chicken farm, two acres, in South Rock Island, near city limits; soven-room house, out buildings, garden, fruit, never-failing well; 3,-200. J. W. Stewart, agent, Safety building. at the councilor, a venerable, gray got on his nerves.

The first case was that of a farm lad, aged about eighteen, accused of shooting a policeman. The boy protested his innocence to Berry up to the last moment, but was duly executed. Some time after this Berry hanged the Netherby hall murderers, one of whom just before he died told Berry that it was he who had shot the policeman for which crime the boy had been executed.

The second case was that of Mary Leffley of Lincolnshire, who was accused of poisoning her husband with arsenic. She, too, protested her innocence, but was hanged. Some years later a farmer dying of cancer con fessed the crime. He said he had had a quarrel with John Leffley, and when both John and Mary were out he had entered their cottage and put arsenic in a milk pudding which had been prepared for John Leffley's dinner.

It was on account of these two grave miscarriages of justice that Berry ultimately turned evangelist. He was persuaded to go to a mission meeting at Bradford and there announced his conversion.-London Tit-Bits.
